some notes on coefficient alpha - university of british ... - hence, coefficient alpha is the lower bound estimate of reliability. 3.0 assumptions underlying coefficient alpha for the purposes of this study, the underlying assumptions of coefficient alpha can be categorized as assumptions underlying the derivation of alpha and assumptions underlying the estimation of alpha. a discussion of these categories follows. coefficient alpha 6 3.1 assumptions ...

computational characterization of surface-associated ... - computational characterization of surface-associated binding interaction of alpha-enolase of trichomonas vaginalis with human plasminogen ... plexes have clearly shown that receptor-bound plasminogen is more readily converted to plasmin than free plasminogen.21,22 enolase was characterized, by using competitive plasminogen binding assays and cross-linking studies with 125i-labeled plasminogen ...

testing for normality - shippensburg university of ... - this is a lower bound of the true significance. a. lilliefors significance correction . statistical tests for normality are more precise since actual . probabilities are calculated. tests for normality calculate the probability that the sample was drawn from a normal population. the hypotheses used are:  $H_0$ : the sample data are not significantly different than a . normal population.  $H_a$ : the ...

bandit algorithms continued: ucb1 - confidence bound) is an algorithm for the multi-armed bandit that achieves regret that grows only logarithmically with the number of actions taken. it is also dead-simple to implement, so good for constrained devices. noel welsh bandit algorithms continued: ucb1 09 november 2010 11 / 18. ucb1 details for each action  $j$  record the average reward  $\bar{x}_j$  and number of times we have tried it  $n_j$ . we ...
